“Robyn Webb’s Diabetes Comfort Food Cookbook is as good as it gets!

Robyn’s clear and creative recipes and obvious passion and reverence for the quality and source of ingredients are the perfect medicine for people with diabetes and their families. —Michel Nuschan, owner and founder of Dressing Room, his homegrown restaurant in Westport, CT and CEO and president of Wholesome Wave Foundation. “What a beautiful, compelling book! The recipes are at once simple, sensual, and customized for people with diabetes. Robyn’s overall comfort food message reassures that one’s diet needn’t compromise on pleasure when skewing healthy. Good food can do us a world of good, and can taste great in the process. Robyn makes this very clear. —Mollie Katzen, author of Moosewood Cookbook “After drooling over the beautiful food photography, I found myself wish that the Diabetes Comfort Food Cookbook was a scratch and sniff cookbook. Robyn Webb has single-handedly changed the stigma of the diabetic diet from one of deprivation to celebration! Brava, Robyn! —David Grotto, RD, LDN, author of 101 Foods That Could Save Your Life!

The carb counts in this book are WRONG. Some are seriously wrong. My 12 year old daughter is newly diagnosed with type 1 diabetes. I got this book for her and she was grateful to have something with carbs listed, so she could plan her insulin shots and meals. She picked a recipe with black beans and rice, which had carbs listed at 6 g per 1 cup serving. She was so excited she could have two cups for 12 g. I stopped and looked at the meal, which was comprised entirely of rice with some black beans and spices and thought the count seemed wrong. Cooked rice AND black beans have carb counts of 43 g per cup. She started crying when I told her the book was wrong. She had one cup, gave herself appropriate insulin for 43 g and her later blood sugar checks made us glad we didn’t believe THIS COMPLETELY INACCURATE CARB COUNT. I looked up another recipe; roast chick peas; also wrong. Chick peas are 80 g of carb per can; multiply by 2, divide by 8 servings, you get 20 g of carb per serving, not the 11 g the book states. It sells recipes to report low carb counts. This book could really hurt someone. I don't understand the ADA name on it. I don't actually understand how the book got this far at all.

Diabetics looking for low carb alternatives need to look elsewhere. All of the recipes are extremely carb heavy (many 20-30g per serving). The author starts focusing on low fat and low calorie which really isn't as significant of a factor for diabetics. None of the recipes are actually significantly different than what you could find in any cookbook since they don't even bother to be low-carbohydrate alternatives. There are no recipes in this book that I will use.

Great book for those who want to control their diabetes or loose waite to become or stay healthy.

If you're diabetic (or just trying to eat healthier) - this is the ONE COOKBOOK YOU SHOULD OWN!!! The recipes are delish & don't require lots of "specialty" ingredients. The recipes appeal to everyone in the family - Comfort food is a term that we love to associate with mealtime. As a recently diagnosed diabetic, I was stressed out over "what do I eat??" This cookbook has allowed me to see I can still have the foods I love - just requires a healthier preparation.

Love the recipes in this book. My husband is a diabetic and this helps me plan his meals.

This is probably a great book for people who don't associate the word "Comfort" with just plain home cooking. It certainly has some great sounding recipes, but not the type of food I call "comfort food." Probably because I'm from the South, and we look at comfort food as entirely different from what this book calls "Comfort" food. I'm sure other people would find wonderful recipes in this book; I'm definitely NOT saying it is a bad book.....just not what I am looking for.

My grandpa was recently diagnosed with diabetes and he also has high blood pressure so he was definitely worried about what he could and could not eat. So I purchased this for him and he LOVES IT. He was so excited to see that he could still eat the foods he loved, with some adjustments of course. There's awesome recipes in there that he has always loved to eat and the instructions are simple to make them. It also tells you the calorie intake and everything. I'm very happy that I came across this. Would recommend it to others

Good tasting recipes that are clear and easy to make. Clear breakdown of Carbs, sugars, calories, etc. as well exchanges. Not only for the Diabetic but also for those wanting to eat more healthy and wanting to drop a few pounds.
