Janice McDonald grew up in the house her grandparents built when they came to Myrtle Beach in the 1930s. She and her sisters spent their days combing the beach and their evenings listening to the ocean outside their bedroom windows. Janice left to become a producer and sometimes reporter for CNN, where she garnered numerous awards, including eight Emmy nominations. She currently owns her own Atlanta-based production company, J-Mac Productions, and has produced material for the Travel Channel, ABC, NBC, CBS, and VH-1, among others. She also is a contributing editor for travelgirl magazine and writes for numerous publications, such as Atlanta Style and Design, South Carolina Homes and Interiors, and Delta Sky. As a writer and producer, she continues to travel the world, but she considers herself a Carolina girl in every sense of the words and calls Myrtle Beach her true home.

Planning a relocation trip to Myrtle Beach, I found this book interesting with some very good information and links. However, I do get a feel that it paints a bit of a glossy picture, and I found some inaccuracies in the text. But overall, it is informative and easy and entertaining to read, and I would recommend it.

It was helpful getting oriented around Myrtle Beach. None of the restaurants recommendations were super great. Maybe there just aren't any terrific places in MB. I did like a couple of the restaurant bars on the Boardwalk. Good fun relaxed atmosphere.

We used this book a lot to preview sights we were planning on seeing and for the most part it was accurate in the description.

Can plan ahead for trip
